

Managing your menopause 3-stage process

Everyone's experience of menopause is different. We experience different symptoms, have different views or philosophies around how we'd prefer to manage them and different medical histories too. This workbook is to help you work out what's right for you and plan your next steps.

Introduction

Stage 1

- Be clear about how menopause is affecting you.
- What symptoms are you experiencing and when? Which are your worst symptoms
- Prioritise what you want to focus on.
- This is the basis for deciding how you want to manage your symptoms and helps with getting the right support.

Stage 2

- Focus on your personal philosophy for managing menopause.
- This is your unique journey, there is no right answer there is just a right answer for you.
- You may also want to combine more than one approach and your philosophy may change over time.

Stage 3

- What action are you going to take?
- What support do you need?

What next?

Stage 3:

- What do you plan to do to:
  - Learn more about menopause (if you need to)?
  - Manage your symptoms and long-term health?
  - Who are you going to talk to? And by when?
  - Who can help you (at work, at home)?

How to talk to your line manager about menopause

Research tells us that some women can find it hard to talk to their manager about how menopause is affecting them. However, your manager is there to help you be at your best at work. To help you both, preparation is important. This will result in a much better conversation and outcome for both you and your employer.

Prepare for your meeting. Check out what support is available in your organisation. Search your organisation's intranet or if there's nothing's there, talk to HR.

Keep a diary of your menopause symptoms and how they're affecting you. Think about what practical, reasonable adjustments might help, being flexible and ideally coming up with some different options. These may be for a short period of time while you work with your medical professional to alleviate your symptoms.

Book a meeting means you'll have time and ideally a private office to talk and will be more likely to get your points across.

Explain your situation clearly. Talk about how menopause is affecting you at work, what you're doing to manage your menopause and what your line manager could do to help. Discuss what the support you would like e.g. reasonable adjustments and timescales. Or sometimes just knowing someone understands and is there to listen can help.

Agree with your manager what you can both do. They may need time to think about the best support. Remember, this may have been on your mind for a long time, but it may be the first time your manager has heard about it. Allow them time to digest the information and seek advice if necessary.

Do you want the conversation to be confidential? Some of us are happy talking about menopause openly, others are not. Talk to your line manager about whether you want the conversation to be kept confidential or if you're happy to discuss it with colleagues. It's your choice.

Follow up. At the end of the meeting put a time in the diary to meet again, whether that's to agree a way forward, to monitor progress or update. Menopause symptoms can change over time.

Above all, it's in both your best interests to find a good solution. All anyone wants is for you to be fit and well and do your job to the best of your ability. Menopause can be isolating if you don't talk to someone but remember all women go through menopause at some point, so you most certainly are not alone.

How to talk to your GP about menopause

If menopausal symptoms are getting in the way of you enjoying life, it's time to talk to your doctor. Here are some helpful, straightforward tips to help you get the best from your appointment.

Don't wait until symptoms feel unbearable. Often women feel they must 'put up' with menopausal symptoms, but if they are affecting you then there are things you can do and support available.

Read the NICE guidelines. The National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines are used by your doctor to determine the type of conversations to have with you and treatments to offer. The guidelines for patients are really useful to read before you see your GP so you know what to expect.

Prepare for your appointment. Keep a list of your symptoms, your menstrual cycle, hot flushes, how you're feeling, any changes you've noticed. Write them down and take them to your appointment.

If you have any preferences about how you manage symptoms tell them that too e.g. if you'd like to try hormone replacement therapy (HRT) or not. Your doctor will thank you for it and it's more likely that together you'll find the right solution faster.

Ask the receptionist which doctor is best to talk to about menopause. It might not be your usual GP, it could be someone who has had special training in the subject.

Ask for a longer appointment if you think you need it. Some surgeries will do this.

Don't be afraid to ask for a second opinion if you don't feel you've received the help you need. Don't be put off, you know how you're feeling and how it's affecting you.

Ask if there is a menopause clinic in your area. If there is and you think this would be helpful, ask for a referral.

Take your partner or a friend with you. They will know how the symptoms are affecting you, could support you at the appointment and also find out how to continue supporting you.

Remember, your GP is there to help and support you, and you should feel comfortable and confident in talking to them about your symptoms and what kind of help you need. Don't think you have to struggle through menopause when there is help and support available.
